scene in his era. Thanks to his camera, we have a record of the famous ships which were built here and sailed every sea on the globe. These slow, fat, whaling vessels had their own beauty under sail. Here is the other side of the coin. The dirty, weary work of scraping the weed and barnacles. Working over their heads, these men stood in a rain of marine debris and flaked paint as they did the necessary but killing work of fitting the ship for sea again. Here they are at the task of scraping and caulking. This is the "Greyhound of New Bedford. Photo from the Presto Press collection of whalers by Albert Cook Church of Fairhaven.

abled this past week while racing in the unofficial shakedown series prior to the trials to choose the America's Cup Defender. The high winds of last Friday proved too much of a strain for the former defender and the revolutionary new 12' meter, Intrepid, recently featured in Life magazine. Mattapoisett Harbor had a visit from the Intrepid following the mishap. The boat, accompanied by a race committee boat, came in for shelter behind Mattapoisett Neck while lines were squared away for towing. Not many residents were aware of the short visit but several people at the wharf had a look at the famed new boat thanks to Dr. Stanley Mysliwy who spotted the 12 meter from his office as soon as she entered the harbor.

MEAL-IN-A-PANCAKE

Looking for a new idea to dress up your Sunday night supper menu? Crispy vegetable pancakes topped with creamy chicken sauce make a filling main course that's off-beat . . . and easy to prepare. Starting with a prepared pancake mix and a divider pak of chicken chow mein, you can mix up a batch of pancakes in the kitchen, and cook them on a griddle right at the table. Topped with hot chicken sauce (the contents of the top can of the divider pak), these pancakes are sure to please the whole family.

VEGETABLE PANCAKES WITH CHICKEN SAUCE

- 2 cups prepared pancake mix
- 1 cup milk or water
- 1 can (43 oz.) Chun King Chicken Chow Mein, divider pak
- 1/2 cup cream
- 1 tsp. curry powder (optional)

Stir pancake mix and milk together in a bowl. Separate cans of chow mein sauce and vegetables. Open can of vegetables, drain well, and fold into the pancake mixture. On a medium hot griddle or electric fry pan set at 375 degrees, spoon pancake mixture to form cakes about 4" in diameter (they will be about 3/4" thick). Cook until golden on one side; turn over and brown on other side. Meanwhile, open can of sauce. Pour sauce into pan, add cream and curry powder and heat to simmering. To serve, spoon sauce over hot vegetable cakes. Makes 8 four-inch pancakes.

Do You Know...

FACT FROM FOLKLORE?

Oddities about the Mysterious Wine of Spain

1. Hens help produce Sherry?
FACT. Sherry producers breed a special type of hen which lay the largest eggs in the world. Four to twenty whites of these eggs, added to each cask of Sherry, remove all extraneous substances in the purification of the wine.
2. Sherry comes from many parts of the world, including the U.S.?
FOLKLORE. All true Sherry is grown in the Jerez region of southern Spain. The word "Sherry" results from the English mispronunciation of the name Jerez. Even Sherries with English names "grow up" in Spain and are bottled in England.
3. Sherry is the drink of bull-fighters?
FACT. Traditionally, the matador sips his favorite Sherry before entering the bullring.
4. There are only two types of Sherry?
FACT. All Sherries are basically either finos (dry types) or olorosos (less dry). Amontillados and Manzanillas are very fine finos. Cream Sherries belong to the oloroso group.
5. 1964 was a great vintage year for Sherry?
FOLKLORE. Sherry has no vintage years! Every bottle is a blend of many harvests.
6. Sherry should never be served chilled?
FOLKLORE. Sherry is the most versatile of wines. It may be served any way you like: at room temperature, chilled, or on-the-rocks.
7. The Sherry of Spain goes well with any foods?
FACT. Sherry is the perfect aperitif to be served before any meal. It also is the perfect companion for soup, fish, meat or dessert.
8. Good luck follows any ship carrying Sherry from Spain?
FOLKLORE...BUT, it is fact that Columbus included Sherry when supplying the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria and though he never did find India, one might say he was lucky anyway.

Colonial Sunday

The following is a scene from Sunday morning, 1771. This story from Colonial Times on Buzzards Bay described the meeting house in Wareham and is typical of this territory in that era. The author, W. R. Bliss, writes:

Along the highways, the green lanes and field paths, and from the boat landings, come the worshippers in family groups, followed by their dogs. Some are on foot, some are on horseback, the wife riding on a pillion behind her husband, their youngest child on the saddle in front of him; all are of one blood and of one faith. Young men are carrying their best homespun coats on their arms, and young women are carrying their best shoes in their hands, intending to put them on before they enter the meeting-house. His Majesty's justice of the peace comes in a dusty shay, drawn by a stiff-limbed mare that refuses to quicken her gait notwithstanding her master's repeated objections, accompanied by a jerk of the reins, to "git along, yer old dumb toad!" The people exchange greetings with each other as they arrive at the doors, and when the Squire alights they salute him respectfully, for no man except the minister is considered to be his peer.

We enter by the great door, whose face is covered with all kinds of announcements to the public. Opposite to us as we enter stands the pulpit, lofty and formidable in appearance. There is a large window behind it, a dome-shaped sounding-board above it, and a steep staircase leading up to its entrance. When the minister has ascended the stairs and shut the pulpit door behind him he is entirely lost to sight. At the foot of the pulpit and facing the congregation are the seats of the deacons. Before them stands the communion table, which is not served on sacrament days with unfermented wine, as we know from an order of the church at Milton in May, 1734, "that the Deacons be desired to provide good Canary wine for the Communion Table".

Next to the pulpit is the pew of the minister's wife. Out of it a narrow door opens into a closet under the pulpit, in which the town's broom, the demijohn of Canary wine, and the pewter baptizing-basin and communion flagons and cups are kept. From this pew a line of square pews runs along the walls of the house, around to the other side of the pulpit. They are of clearest oak, whose beauty is not covered by paints. They were made with of hearing are seated; the hind-seats are occupied by younger persons. Of the same rank are certain seats in the galleries, reached by stairs in the corners of the house.

Mr. Rowland Thacher is the minister. He came fresh from Harvard College to this secluded town more than thirty years ago; and here he has stayed, occupied in preaching, farming, marrying, burying, and representing all the scholastic learning of the community. It is said that he is not "as young as he used to be"; but he is still able to sympathize in the fortunes and misfortunes of his flock. He has been poorly paid for his labors; his small salary has always been small and always in arrears, and even now the town is owing to him that of last year. Nevertheless, with a cheerful countenance he appears at the parapet of the pulpit, and stretching out his hands as signal for the congregation to stand up, he begins the services with a prayer thirty minutes long.

When it is ended the seats in the pews are let fall, making a noise like an irregular discharge of muskets; there is a shuffling of feet on the sanded floor, an uneasy settling of the congregation in the seats, and at last everybody is still. During the stillness Mr. Thacher appears again and announces a psalm to be sung. There are not many psalm books in the house, there is no choir and but little knowledge of music. But there is Deacon William Blackmer, of Blackmer's Pond, who has a strong voice, and for that reason has been appointed to read and tune the psalms in meeting. He stands on the pulpit stairs with a pine pitch-pipe in hand. He blows the key-note, recites two lines of the psalm, adjusts his voice, which is somewhat raspy by reason of too many shoutings to his oxen yesterday, and then he starts away. The congregation joins in an arduous pursuit. It lags behind, its tones are dreadfully discordant. Some dogs sitting in the alleys utter cries of distress, and Mr. Thacher's collie, lying at the pulpit door, howls pathetically at the music. But Deacon Blackmer, as in duty bound, keeps on his winding way, by turns reciting and starting, until all the psalm is worked off; and the congregation then relapses into quiet.

From this condition it is summoned by a signal to stand up while Mr. Thacher becomes "more large in prayer". This prayer is an important part of the service. It has a systematic beginning, middle and end. It takes alternately the form of a petition and a narration, and includes within its sweep Noah, Abraham, the ancient Hebrews, the sick and the afflicted baptizing babies in the meeting-house on the first Sunday after their birth, however inclement the weather or perilous the journey thither; a cruel custom as we now estimate the value of infant life. John Cotton, minister at Hampton, wrote in his diary: "Being Ld's day my wife was delivered of a Son who was baptised by myself on ye Sabbath, following viz Dec. 28, 1701 & was called Simon".

Now, the principal business of Thomas Samson is with the tall, brass-bound hour-glass standing on the pulpit's edge. He turns it in view of the preacher, who is to preach an hour, or as long as the sands are running. It is not the tender mercy and love, but the inflexible justice and anger, of the Supreme Being that the preacher sets before the congregation. He declares that "the saints in heaven will rejoice in seeing the justice of God glorified in the sufferings of the damned." The doctrine is cut into many divisions, in which the objections of skeptics are stated and successfully controverted. Then comes the application, followed by reproof and exhortation adapted to the supposed needs of all hearers. Perhaps it will be necessary to turn the hour-glass for another run before every hearer can get the teaching fitted to his condition.

The dreadful doctrine of the sermon and the loud voice of the preacher are a contrast to the cheerful and peaceful surroundings of the house, whose doors and windows are open, admitting freely the summer air and the beneficent sunshine. The rustling of leaves on neighboring oaks, the songs of birds, the stamping of horses hitched to the trees, the drowsy hum of insects, are interludes to the long argument. Now a great bumble-bee sails into the house as if it were a traveler turned aside to inquire about the noise in the pulpit. Every eye turns to this new-comer as to one that brings relief. It circles around the preacher's head, it buzzes against the pulpit window, skims back and forth over the congregation, and encourages the restless boys and girls to believe that it is about to alight on the bald head of Barnabas Bates, the warden.

In spite of the energetic tones of the preacher a drowsiness comes over some of the farmers, who try to resist it by standing up, or by taking off their heavy homespun coats, or by going out to quiet their horses. A babe lying on its mother's lap as she sits in the doorway of the porch utters a cry, and suddenly every head turns towards the babe. But the preacher continues to unfold his gloomy theme, unmindful of the weariness apparent in the con-

He has been helped through the program by an eye donor and this young surgeon is back on the job and has been given an opportunity to save the lives of countless others. This is only one example of the wonderful work "Banking on Sight" does and it is within the power of the general public to make a story like this come true again.
